New book ‘Citizen King’ teaches readers personal empowerment

Les Jensen, host of New Human Living Radio, brings fresh perspective on personal power

BOULDER, Colo. — Working as an engineer in television broadcasting, author Les Jensen spent much of his career around high-power transmitters. This career led him to draw the comparison between the energy emitted by these devices and the internal power of people. His new book, “Citizen King: The New Age of Power” (published by Balboa Press), discusses the potential that lies within every person.

“My book teaches you how to get your ego to trust the power of your heart and then show up for yourself by taking action, bringing that inspiration into fulfillment,” Jensen says.

Believing that the world needs authentic wisdom, Jensen wrote his book as a guide to navigating turbulent times. He asserts that people already have higher wisdom residing within them, but just have to figure out how to unlock it in order to discover their personal power.

An excerpt from “Citizen King”:

“‘Citizen King: The New Age of Power’ represents a new age of power emanating from citizens acting like kings. Not citizens acting like kings with dominion over other citizens, but rather, citizens acting like kings in their own personal kingdom, in their own personal story, in their own personal potential.”
